Proposal Objective: Over the past 150 years, the lower portion of Trout Creek, a tributary to the Truckee River, has been impacted by development of the downtown, the rail yard and various other land uses. These impacts have resulted from channelization and realignment of Trout Creek and have upset the natural channel processes such as bed load movement, habitat creation, hydrology, and riparian connectivity. Despite past efforts to manage Trout Creek, flooding impacts associated with the 1997 and 2006 rain-on-snow events occurred. Efforts to manage high flows and address impacts associated with flooding of lower Trout Creek has also resulted in severe impacts to the biological and aesthetic integrity of the stream and riparian system. This project seeks to reduce flood risks for downtown business and residents and improve the natural and aesthetic qualities of lower Trout Creek. The proposed restoration design takes advantage of project opportunities, as well as constraints, to rework the channel profile, planform and bankfull geometry to create a morphology that is both functional and resilient and borrows from the restoration projects implemented in mountain and meadow stream systems throughout the Truckee and Tahoe region. The goals of the project are to reduce the risk of flooding and restore properly ecosystem functioning to the creek. One project objective is to minimize urban flooding in Trout Creek, while reducing the risk of urban flooding associated with the 100-year design flood event, protecting property and resources from bank failure. Additional objectives are to effectively integrate water management with land use planning and restore Trout Creek to as natural habitat as reasonably possible, enhance fish habitat, create additional riparian areas, and bring creek awareness into the community creating stewardship.*
